Rendell Highlights New Pa. Dog Breeding Control Law

by KYW's Kim Glovas

A ceremonial signing was held Monday in Langhorne, Pa. for a new law designed to improve Pennsylvania's dog breeding industry.

Governor Ed Rendell said the bill went into effect earlier this month so dog owners could no longer destroy their canines.

Rendell adopted his own pet, Maggie, from a puppy mill after she was turned out as a breeder. He says she had delivered a stillborn litter and was no longer profitable:

"Maggie was one of the lucky ones, unbelievably, because most dogs kept in those condition, kept in wire hutches, not only suffer physical problems but suffer tremendous behavioral problems. But Maggie must have been touched by God because she is the happiest dog I've ever met in my life, and I don't know how it happened."

The ceremony took place at the Center for Animal Referral and Emergency Services in Langhorne.
